

Antique Footman's Carry Tray, English, Fruitwood, Butler's Work Box, Victorian

DESCRIPTION

Our Stock # 25505

This is a charming antique footman's carry tray. An English, estate made fruitwood and oak butler's work box, dating to the early Victorian period, circa 1850. A delightfully practical piece with country house character and enduring appeal.

- Superb Victorian work tray, ideal for serving, display or rustic interior decor
  - Crafted from select fruitwood and oak, presenting fine grain interest and rich caramel hues
  - Divided into twin compartments, ideal for cutlery, tools, or tabletop organisation
  - Tactile butler's grasp inset within the division for comfort
- Estate made with a tactile, well-aged finish – gently timeworn commensurate with age
  - Stout pinned joints and confident construction convey durability and provenance
  - A fine decorative or functional addition to a pantry, kitchen, or hallway

A splendid example of 19th century domestic craftsmanship, this butler's carry tray would make a striking addition to the refined country home or period property alike.

Solid joints and construction delivered ready for the home
