

6' 7" Tall Antique Room Divider, English, Needlepoint, Privacy Screen, Regency

DESCRIPTION

Our Stock # 25725

This is an antique 4-panel room divider. An English, rosewood and needlepoint folding privacy screen, dating to the Regency period, circa 1820. A fine and well detailed example, this screen presents charming embroidered panels and showcases the refinement and artistry of late Georgian interior design.

- Fashioned from select stocks with excellent figuring, displaying deep caramel tones and appealing grain pattern
- Formed of four hinged panels, the screen offers versatile use — equally suited to defining spaces or serving as an elegant decorative feature
- Each section is adorned with finely worked needlepoint embroidery, presenting figural, floral, and animal scenes
- The panels are arranged with three to five detailed vignettes per section, each demonstrating outstanding needlework and vibrant composition

- Encased within refined walnut frames that harmonise beautifully with the warm hues of the textile work

- Mounted on smooth, quality hinges that enable effortless folding and stable display

- Fully extended, the piece spans approximately 250cm, providing an impressive decorative presence when placed against a wall
