This is an antique portrait. An English, framed ceramic painting, dating to the late Victorian period, circa 1890 and later.

Deputy Surgeon General John Robert Theobalds (dates unknown - granted retirement by Queen Victoria in April 1880) was stationed in Madras, as part of Her Majesty's Indian Military Forces. Villier's & Quicks photographic services of Bristol held their premises at 42 Park Street at the end of the 1880s. Their speciality was recreating photographs in oil or watercolour.

- Wonderful ceramic portrait and several period photographs
- Displays a desirable aged patina, presented within a later, professional frame
- Portrait skilfully applied to ceramic, observed from an original photograph – photo present
- Painted in watercolours, with subtle colour and delicate detail
- Period photographs show Theobalds in further poses, and one family portrait with children

This is a fascinating antique portrait of a military surgeon, along with portrait photographs from the Victorian period. Presents nicely within a later frame and offers a slice of history, possibly suitable for an institution or as decorative interest. Delivered pol
