

Antique Apothecary Pill Rolling Machine, English, Chemist, Countertop, Victorian

DESCRIPTION

Our Stock # 18.8535

This is an antique apothecary pill rolling machine. An English, mahogany and brass chemist's countertop instrument, dating to the early Victorian period, circa 1850.

- Fascinating example of an apothecary roller, with a desirable display appeal
- Displaying a wonderfully aged patina and in good original order
- Select stocks show fine grain interest, patination and rich russet hues
- Sloping base dressed with a brass rolling platform, with the alternating groove set upon the handle
- Arranged for 24 individual pills per batch, the chemist would roll the mixture and form them within the grooves

This is a superb antique pill rolling machine, once gracing an apothecary counter and now a wonderful decorative item. Delivered waxed, polished and ready to display.

Search London Fine for #18.8535, or scan the QR code for more photos and details

DIMENSIONS

Max Width: 45.5cm (18")

Max Depth: 32.5cm (12.75")

Max Height: 6.5cm (2.5")

